or; to uphold or to oppose the policy that a recommended by sur National Officers, and I do not complain of it; popular vigiliance in the best security for public fiberty; but we leave little or so time, we give no portion of our talents or money, to advocate the interests of North Carolina, and establish a policy for the State. Without seeming to manume the office of Capsor over othors, I would respectfully appeal to North Carolinians, of all parties, and cornectly inquire if this is right—if it is particle—if it is wise? Though I am not able to prescribe a cure for such evils, true affection for the State justifies, if it does not require that they should be stated. It is some check to be reminded of them. In our State (I say it with revergence and love for the dear mother of ut all) there is a lamentable lack of preper pride; we are not accustomed to to be reminded of them. In our State (I may it with revorptice and love for the dear mother of our all) there is a immeetable lack of preper pride; we are not accustomed to claim for the State all that she is entitled to; we do not take the stand we sught to occupy; we are too much in the linbit of looking at the things that belong to us, as rather inferior to those on-the like kind belonging to our neighbors. For example: we look with indifference, if not with complexency, upon the efforts of other Southern States to establish and foster a direct foreign trade with ports of theirs, not superior to our own, and hardly a voice is raised to occur even a portion of our own trade to our own scaport lowns. We cheer them in their exertions to do their own experting and importing, instead of paying tribute to northern cities; whilst we supinely pay tribute ourselves to Virginia and South Carolina, as well as the same northern cities, and make no struggle to resist it. Is this wise? Is this the part of children—of statesmen—of patriots of North Carolina? Why may we not, with one mind, ranolve that we will use all proper means to change these habits of indolence, and let that constitute a branch of our system of Internal Improvements.

The Assembly of 1636 approved, patronized and commenced a system of Internal Improvements in North Carolina; yet it is plain that the habit of our people, to look without hope of any practical result open all our own exertions, in that rure of enterprine which others pursue with wonderful success, coupled with the apathy of our public leaders, has found public opinion to for ther advanced than to be clamorously urging the people to meet together and send Delegates to Conventions, "to device some plane of Improvement?" as if a plan had not already been devised and patronized by the State, which is now in a course of successful execution.

I carreetly inquire what is to be the conor open and other lore and fill the magic of Improvement any of the divided excuse of State? Has she a port of so made, and one thus connected world? The fact is even so; anticipate he in the obvious that we need only to connect, by some practicable road, with a Counties, and the State will as soon be proved that our Capital wought her children to one home all have tirel together come of her ctions; and still have laid open and the planter, more since and the planter, more and work, because they are exected until any or that our Forts are not National works, because they are exected until any or that our Forts are not National works, because they are exected until any or that our Forts are not National works, because they are exected until any or that our Forts are not National works, because they are exected until any or that our Forts are not National works, because they are exected until any or that our Forts are not National works, because they are exected until any or that our Forts are not National works, because they are exected until the fact of the dealt with as an attelling to the community shall determine.
